About Rome

Roman Italy was created officially by the Roman emperor Augustus with the Latin name Italia. It was the first time in history that the Italian Peninsula (from the Alps to the Ionian Sea) was united under Italy.[14] Its historic centre is listed by UNESCO as a World Heritage Site.[15] Monuments and museums such as the Vatican Museums and the Colosseum are among the world's most visited tourist destinations with both locations receiving millions of tourists a year. Rome hosted the 1960 Summer Olympics and is the seat of United Nations' Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO). The city hosts the headquarters of many international business the same name. In the year 292, the three islands of Corsica, Sardinia and Sicily (including Malta) were added to Roman Italy by Diocletian. Roman Italy remained united until the sixth century, when it was divided between the Byzantine Empire and territories of the Germanic peoples. Since then, "Italia" remained divided for nearly thirteen centuries until 1861 when it was reunited in a similar way in the modern "Kingdom of Italy".
